

Dear Sirs:

I do not understand why cellular companies are allowed to keep adding "special fees" in addition to their monthly charges, in an attempt to disguise their purpose.

They are disguised to appear as required regulatory fees, when they are not! They are instead a normal "cost of business" and as such, should be part of my advertised monthly rate, not a special fee which is added in without warning.

As it is, a company can advertised a low monthly late - and add in any number of special fees they want without warning or notice. This is extremely unfair to consumer, in fact I would consider it deceptive. These are not regulatory, or taxes - these fees are known upfront and there is no reason to "hide them" as a required government mandated tax.

Sincerely
C. Lee